Hi [REDACTED] Exemptions 6 & 7C - privacy information - Thanks for your reply. EPA is working with Illinois EPA and some of the responsible parties to do more investigation so we are sure to identify all the potential sources of the contamination. Right now, we have identified several sources of the contamination, but we believe there may be more sources. Part of a long-term clean up solution will include cleaning up sources of the pollution.

I also received your voicemail. I have meetings all afternoon. Can I call you tomorrow to discuss the other issue you want to talk with me about?

Thank you,
Jacquie

Jacquie,
I didn't quite get that in your other email. It is confusing to distinguish between the clean up solutions and actually stopping the pollution as I don't imagine you can clean it up without stopping it.

Thanks,

Mr. Cha forwarded your message to me for response, as I am the attorney assigned to the Wedron Ground Water site. As you and I have discussed during previous phone conversations, EPA is using our legal authorities to provide alternate water to residents with contamination and to investigate and develop a long-term solution for the residents in Wedron within the plume of contamination. EPA is not powerless to stop polluters. EPA's CERCLA authorities are only one of many legal authorities EPA can use to investigate and clean up pollution. As I wrote in my email to you yesterday, EPA is working under several legal authorities, including the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act and the Safe Drinking Water Act, to identify a long-term clean up solution for the homes within the plume of contamination in Wedron. If you have additional questions or would like to talk about this further, please feel free to call me at: 312.353.4191.

Thank you,
Jacquie

Dear Mr. Cha,

After getting clarification from Steve Faryan's team on the Wedron disaster we in our small town have fallen into despair. The fact that the EPA has no legal authority to stop the polluters is beyond comprehension. You might be able to finally identify them but are powerless to stop them due to CERCLA. Is it true that we have no recourse as we watch the problem worsen? My 23 acre farm is now worth $1.00.

Sincerely,
